

President Russell M. Nelson said, “[T]oday, I invite you to make the scriptures your personal Liahona, the temple your place of refuge and recalibration, and your personal prayers the way you learn where the Lord needs you to be that day. Over time, you will be astonished by how He will guide you to be exactly where you can lead, guide, and walk beside someone who needs you.”

Reflection

- When have I sensed the Spirit helping me know what was enough, rather than pushing me to do more?
- Where in my week could I make more room for unexpected chances to serve someone, even if it means changing my plans?
- Am I trying to accomplish everything on my own, or am I bringing my daily decisions about time and energy to the Lord first?

President Russell M. Nelson said, “[T]oday, I invite you to make the scriptures your personal Liahona, the temple your place of refuge and recalibration, and your personal prayers the way you learn where the Lord needs you to be that day. Over time, you will be astonished by how He will guide you to be exactly where you can lead, guide, and walk beside someone who needs you.”

Reflection

- When have I sensed the Spirit helping me know what was enough, rather than pushing me to do more?
- Where in my week could I make more room for unexpected chances to serve someone, even if it means changing my plans?
- Am I trying to accomplish everything on my own, or am I bringing my daily decisions about time and energy to the Lord first?

President Russell M. Nelson said, “[T]oday, I invite you to make the scriptures your personal Liahona, the temple your place of refuge and recalibration, and your personal prayers the way you learn where the Lord needs you to be that day. Over time, you will be astonished by how He will guide you to be exactly where you can lead, guide, and walk beside someone who needs you.”

Reflection

- When have I sensed the Spirit helping me know what was enough, rather than pushing me to do more?
- Where in my week could I make more room for unexpected chances to serve someone, even if it means changing my plans?
- Am I trying to accomplish everything on my own, or am I bringing my daily decisions about time and energy to the Lord first?

President Russell M. Nelson said, “[T]oday, I invite you to make the scriptures your personal Liahona, the temple your place of refuge and recalibration, and your personal prayers the way you learn where the Lord needs you to be that day. Over time, you will be astonished by how He will guide you to be exactly where you can lead, guide, and walk beside someone who needs you.”

Reflection

- When have I sensed the Spirit helping me know what was enough, rather than pushing me to do more?
- Where in my week could I make more room for unexpected chances to serve someone, even if it means changing my plans?
- Am I trying to accomplish everything on my own, or am I bringing my daily decisions about time and energy to the Lord first?